

6516204991.txt

The quandry that traditional broadcasters find themselves in with respect to the threat posed by satellite radio is a direct result of their own greed and the FCC's misguided policies. I have little sympathy for them or the commission, both of whom single-handedly destroyed local radio.
Leave satellite radio alone. If the operators of terrestrial AM-FMs can't figure out how to compete against the satellite services without government intervention, then they don't deserve to survive.